1 Subjects and Verbs

The key in learning an new language is to understand how to use the verbs. Therefore, we concentrate on these. There exist two tracks of verbs in Spanish, those verbs ending in -ar and those ending in -er or -ir. For instance, we have hablar for to speak, and comer for to eat and vivir meaning to live¹.

Pronunciation. The pronunciation is easy in Spanish. First there is only one single stress in each word. If there is an apostrophe the corresponding vowel/syllable is stressed, otherwise the second to last syllable is stressed. For instance, we have hab-lar, thus hab is stressed. In Spanish the leading h is not pronounced, thus hablar is pronounced as ah-blahr, with the bold part being stressed. Furthermore, the v is pronounced as b, and ll as j.

Conjugation. To conjugate -ar verbs, remove the -ar ending and add the corresponding ending of the desired subject. For instance with the word hablar (to speak) we get the top part in Table 1.

Note that el is masculine, ella is feminine and usted is formal for you. In case of group of peoples we have ellos for groups of man or mixed groups, ellas for groups consisting only of woman, and ustedes for taking formally to a group. For -er endings, remove the -er ending and add the corresponding subject ending. We use comer (to eat) as example, cf. Table 1.

And very similar to the -er verbs, are the -ir verbs, where only the nosotros and vosotros endings are different. For vivir (to live) is printed in the bottom part of Table 1.
